Description

Standing Free is the funny, emotional, at times downright bizarre but always enthralling autobiography of 1980s and 90s Aberdeen FC legend Theo ten Caat. In the 1980s and 90s, Aberdeen Football Club dipped into the Dutch market to bring a succession of signings across the North Sea. One of them was Theo ten Caat, to this day a cult hero among the Red Shed. Theo's time at Aberdeen was certainly eventful, with the manager who signed him sacked little more than six months after his arrival. Told in Theo's own words, this is the story not only of his time at Pittodrie – in which he lifts the lid on his relationship with Willie Miller – but his colourful career in his homeland, too. Which international superstar did Theo almost come to blows with in a so-called friendly match? Which club owner managed to transfer a player he didn't even own? Who refused to postpone a game even though one of the players had just died? All is revealed in this no-punches-pulled chronicle of Theo's career, both in Scotland and Holland.
